He was taken into the hack and carried to his home in Auburn where he received medical assistance. Mr Furner, when about to leave the house caught his foot upon the top stair and fell.

General Knox entered largely into brick making and the manufacture of lime and lumber, and also carried on an extensive mercantile business under the management of Capt Thomas Vose a gallant officer of artillery, at first as clerk and afterwards as partner. These and other varied industries which he carried on brought to the place and gave employment to large numbers of mechanics and other emigrants, who became permanent residents of Thomaston and who stimulated the growth of the town. He also attempted to introduce improved breeds of cattle and sheep, and as early as 1796, undertook the business of ship building, and several coasters were launched and kept running in his employ.

To facilitate his lumber operations, Knox purchased the right to improve the navigation of Georges river and completed locks of sufficient capacity for the passage of rafts and gondolas, at the several falls in Warren, opening the navigation of the river as far up as Union. His plans and projects of improvement were more suited to his expansive mind than to his actual resources, he being for the most part of the time while there, embarrassed by want of money, and they consequently resulted more advantageously to others than to himself.

These pecuniary troubles culminated in 1798 and caused for a short time some distress to his endorsers, Generals Lincoln and Jackson, who were, however, amply secured from loss by assignment of valuable land.

To Washington under date of Boston, 15 Jan, 1797, he writes —"The loss of two lovely children on which you condole in your letter, has been recently renewed and increased by the death of our (Washington) of seven years old."

"Unfortunate indeed have we been, in the loss of eight children, requiring the exercise of our whole stock of philosophy and religion.

"We have lately come from St. George's to pass the winter in this town. We are distant about two hundred miles by land which we may easily ride in six days when the snow is on the ground on which wheels with a very little improvement of a small part of the road. I am beginning to experience the good effects of my residence upon my lands. I am truly glad that it is more than double I think since I determined to make it my home.

We can obtain [illegible] the same article can be carried from my store to the [illegible] would require an apology to any other than you.

His last letter to Washington is dated 22d December, 1799 eight days after that illustrious man had breathed his last — "I am here (Thomaston) and should be more happy in my pursuits than I have ever been, were some embarrassments entirely dissipated. But this will require time. My estate with indulgence is competent and greatly more to the discharge of every cent I owe.

"All who [illegible] unite with me in presenting to Mrs Washington our affectionate remembrance. I [illegible] the greatest blessing by wishing you a long life, I confess I believe that while you continue here you are detained from a much better condition. But I pray for you that you [illegible] on earth may be days of felicity without clouds sickness or sorrow.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE STATE SUPERINTENDENT—INTERESTING STATISTICS OF GROWTH AND THE CAUSES PRODUCING THE SAME

State Superintendent of Schools Luce has finished his annual report, and it will be placed before the Legislature this week. The report has been delayed by the failure to obtain prompt returns from several sections of the State, and even now it is not complete because of the failure of the School Committees of twelve towns and plantations and the municipal officers of eleven to make the returns required by law, as follows: Auburn, Aurora, Bath, Belmont, Chester, Corryling Plantation, [illegible], Frankfort, Greenville, [illegible] Plantation, Howland, [illegible], Montville, No 21 plantation, Prospect, Portland, [illegible] plantation, Stetson, Webster, Wesley, West Bath, Wiscasset. These returns should have been made in [illegible] by the municipal officers of [illegible] and their non-receipt has involved a loss to the school in the above municipalities of amounts of State aid ranging from $200 to $5[illegible]

The total school resources for the past year were $1,0[illegible]1,6[illegible]4, an increase of $12[illegible] over the preceding school year. The amount expended however, increased $[illegible]32[illegible], making the total expenditures for the year $1 [illegible] or an average of $5[illegible] per scholar in the State against $5 19 for the preceding year. On account of increased attendance the [illegible] amount expended per scholar was $[illegible]75 against $[illegible]04 in 188[illegible] 3. The increased expenditures were [illegible] for by increased local appropriations and by [illegible] careful husbanding of resources [illegible] from change and more [illegible] public interest in the schools, [illegible] and [illegible] better teachers, better supervision and [illegible]. Superintendent Luce says in speaking of the school attendance that the increase of 870 upon the returns for 1882 3 the first [illegible], and which it was hoped [illegible] of a series of increase, [illegible] that as the decrease had been for a series of years, has not been maintained. The statistics for the past year show a decrease in attendance of 3 3 from the year [illegible] decrease so small when compared with the average for the decade [illegible] over 12,000, that there is still hope of a future improvement in this regard. The decrease in the whole number of different pupils attending the schools is [illegible] what larger than that in the number of persons of school age. In the registered attendance upon summer schools the decrease corresponds very nearly with that in school population while that in average attendance is very [illegible] all [illegible] points to the existence of some condition or conditions of [illegible] character such as perhaps the prevalence of epidemics peculiar to children. That it is not due to the general diminution of parental interest or to poor teaching is evident from the marked increase in both registered and average attendance upon the winter schools. Taken as a whole he says, the statistics for the year [illegible] of any, because [illegible] the loss of one day in the average in length of all the schools in the State, but an increase nevertheless, in the aggregate amount of service rendered by teachers. There has been a continued movement toward the consolidation of schools and the abolition of school districts. Another movement, equally as [illegible] that shown in the statistics [illegible] relating to the scope of the work and the course of study pursued. There has been a broadening of instruction toward the practical. There has been for several years a steady improvement in the character of the teachers employed but of the 7,148 employed the past year 1,074 were new to the work of whom probably not more than fifty had ever received any training for their work other than that gained incidentally while pursuing their school studies. The cause of this is the present system of electing teachers on account of the school district system.

The free high schools appear to be growing more and more into popular favor, and are exerting a beneficial influence upon the other grades, both below and above them. During the past two years the number of towns holding free high schools has increased from 86 to 123, the number of terms of schools from 173 to 285, the aggregate number of weeks from 1,874 to 3 110 the total attendance from 6,315 to 9 757 the average attendance from 5,102 to 7 733, the total expense from $59,050 to $99 373, and the expense to the State from $13 813 to $21 888.

The number of students attending the three normal schools of the State has increased from 190 in 1883 to 203 in 1884, but the number graduating decreased from 83 to 79. Speaking of these schools, Superintendent Luce recommends that the diplomas given the graduates be made legal evidence of fitness for teaching, and licenses to teach in any school in the State below the high school grade, second, that the Board of Trustees be authorized to arrange for and establish in any one or all of them courses of study of not less than four years, third, that the regular appropriations for current expenses be increased to not less than $20 000 per annum.

PETITION FOR THE INCORPORATION OF EXETER, ME

The first settler was Lemuel Tozier, in 1801. Dr Blasdel, of Dixmont, was active in promoting settlements, and it was known as Blasdeltown. Exeter was chosen as the incorporated name by some of the people who came from Exeter, N H. It was the 180th town in the District of Maine, and incorporated February 16, 1811. The warrant for holding the first meeting was issued by Moses Hodsdon, Esq, of "Condeskeag Plantation." It was held April 1, 1811, Matthew Hodges, Moderator, John Chamberlain, Clerk. Among the first things provided for was the building of school houses, and the employment of teachers. The Petition is copied from the Massachusetts Records by Dr J F Pratt, of Chelsea, Mass. F I D

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in General Court assembled, June, 1810

The subscribers inhabitants of Township Number Three in the Fourth Range, North of the Waldo Patent (commonly known by the name of Blasdeltown) beg leave to represent that their numbers have increased to above forty families, that they labor under all the many and great inconveniences which naturally arise in consequence of their unincorporated situation. They therefore pray, that the said Township with the inhabitants therein may be incorporated into a town by the name of Exeter, with all the privileges and immunities which other towns in this Commonwealth enjoy, and as in duty bound will ever pray.

Little Circles with the Foils

FENCING SCHOOLS AND THEIR THRUSTS AND PARRIES

Fencing said an old frequenter of the Paris fencing schools is the true exercise for a gentleman. It is not brutal and though it is a hand to hand struggle, it never arouses bad blood. It calls for judgment, promptness of decision and quickness and delicacy of execution. It is an exercise that exhilarates rather than fatigues. It gives suppleness to the muscles and subordinates their movement to the action of the will.

The tribute paid by the old sword man to his favorite exercise will find many of those its supporters in New York, says the Tribune. The city has two schools of fencing [illegible] having its own methods and its own [illegible]. [illegible] the French method [illegible] fencing [illegible]. Captain Nichols the instructor of the New York Fencing Club [illegible] teaches a method partly derived from the Italian school but principally original.

Mr Senac's theory of fencing is that there is but one school, and that this school has but two fundamental principles—to touch one's adversary and not to be touched oneself. Whatever helps to accomplish this object is admissible. He believes that the best results are obtained by the orthodox method. Entering Mr Senac's academy when a contest between two good swordsmen is in progress the spectator will find the two fencers placed about six feet apart—a distance which is carefully preserved—the knees well bowed so that by a sudden straightening of the left leg the whole body may be launched forward, and the left arm raised to aid in preserving the proper balance. The points of the two foils describe a series of tiny circles and spirals around each other so small that they could almost be surrounded by a young girl's ring. The foils seem to be playing tag. One runs round and round after the other until the point with a sharp metallic click and then the pursuer becomes the pursued and runs away in his turn. At last something like a flash of lightning passes across the space that separates the two swordsmen, and one of the foils bends almost double, its button firmly planted over the heart of one of the men.

To the uninitiated the whole performance has been a mystery. This is what has been going on. The game of tag was the result of an attempt on the part of one of the fencers to pass the point of his foil underneath his opponent's foil, so as to bring it opposite to an exposed point. But the other, anticipating the danger which threatened him, quickly put into the same movement called in technical language the contre, and the sword go circling around each other, the one ever trying to reach the exposed point for the other cuts him off. At last an opening occurs. One of the men has not been quick enough in taking the contre or has been thrown off his guard by a skillful feint. The other sees his opportunity. His right arm which has hitherto been slightly bent to give greater suppleness to the wrist, suddenly straightens and the whole body follows in a desperate lunge. The stroke is executed with a rapidity which indicates a rare physical development. This series of "contres" and "doubles" (as the motion by which the contre is eluded is called) is the pride of the classical fencers for it furnishes a system of attack and parry which never removes the point of the foil from before the eyes of the adversary.

Captain Nichols, however, at the New York Fencing Club considers the contre an invention of the Evil One. He practices two perfect circles, one on the right side of the body and the other on the left. His pupils stand near to each other in fencing and seldom make a lunge. He teaches them to hold the arm straight, the point of the sword elevated and the hand in tierce that is with the palm downward, for in this way he says that a greater leverage is obtained upon the sword of one's adversary. The classical method delights in straight thrusts upon the principle that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. Captain Nichols however makes many effective thrusts in a roundabout way, by suddenly changing his hand from carte to tierce or from tierce to carte. A movement of this sort often gives an opening for a sideways thrust, against which an adversary who is completely protected against a straight blow.

The interest which is felt in fencing is shown by the rapid growth of the Fencing Club. There are now over three hundred members, and the club house is furnished with every convenience for exercise and for repose and refreshment after exercise. To see fencing of a truly artistic character, however, one must go to Mr Senac's room on Saturday evening. This is the time when the best amateurs assemble for a short contest with the master or to try their skill against one another. M Lefevre, the French Minister, is frequently to be seen there, and he is still, in spite of his age, a swordsman with whom it is not safe to trifle. In his day he was one of the best amateurs of Paris and he still retains the suppleness of his wrist and the judgment of his eye although he is no longer as nimble as some of his younger rivals.

Many women take fencing lessons. This is not a new idea in Paris and Vienna. The Empress of Austria is said to be wonderfully skillful in handling the foil. But recently M Senac has had not a few female pupils. Some of them are actresses who fancy that a knowledge of fencing will be useful to them. Some come in obedience to the orders of physicians and derive much benefit from the exercise.

A LETTER OF THANKS.

Mrs Lydia E Pinkham. Very dear Madam. My wife Ari A Green has suffered unknown pains till I had almost given up the hopes of finding any relief for her. But the Guiding Spirit referred me to your Vegetable Compound. I went 12 miles to purchase a bottle and the first two doses gave her immediate relief and after the use of the first bottle she declared herself a new person; two bottles entirely cured her. Your medicine is invaluable to me. It was indeed a messenger of peace to my house. It cured my wife and God knows I am the happiest man alive to-day. Words cannot express our feelings towards you. SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1885.

FOR MAYOR:

THE TICKET COMPLETED.

The Republicans completed their ticket last evening and the nominations made in the several wards will at once commend themselves to the voters. There was a large attendance at nearly all of the ward meetings, which shows that the great interest in the coming election is in [illegible] with the [illegible] approaches. Although there were several vigorous contests the utmost good feeling prevailed. [illegible] with a spirit of [illegible] demonstrating that the friends of the [illegible] candidates gracefully submitted [illegible] and that all [illegible] party support of the ticket [illegible].

[illegible] working day now remains before this [illegible] is given to the [illegible]. Let every Republican who has [illegible] Our candidate for Mayor was given a very hearty [illegible] and [illegible] doubt with proper effort. Our [illegible] the opposition [illegible] to get control [illegible] [illegible] the contest is over [illegible] take advantage of [illegible] for the cause [illegible].

[illegible] Fred E. Nealley.

What Does It Mean?

[illegible] Mr. Nealley [illegible]

[illegible] the Commercial take the ground [illegible] Mr. Nealley [illegible] inconsistent or [illegible] Nealley?

Go to the Polls.

Prominent Republicans in each ward should arrange their business Monday so that they can go to the polls and [illegible] the work [illegible] It will show more than anything else the interest that is taken in this election and a determination to contribute everything in their power to the success of the ticket. If you have a team so much the better. [illegible] Vote for Nealley and [illegible].

A Good Indorsement

Against Mr. Nealley, personally, there is not a word to be said. He is a gentleman who possesses a wide circle of friends and is highly esteemed by them all. While this is true, however, it is also equally true that his election, coupled with that of a Republican majority in both branches of the City Council, would mean the running of the city government in the same old rut in which it has been run for years, and the postponement for another year at least of many reforms which [illegible] to be desirable.—Commercial.

We most cheerfully subscribe to the first part of the above paragraph. If Mr. Nealley and a Republican City Government are elected, as we have every reason to believe they will be, the business of the city will be conducted in the same judicious [illegible] as in the past, and this is just what the people want. As to the many "reforms which the people generally recognize to be desirable" we would like a bill of particulars. What reform is desirable, which the people are liable to secure at the hands of a Democratic administration? The two candidates are now in the field and we leave it to the people to decide whether or not Mr. White is liable to introduce any "desirable reforms" that would be ignored by Mr. Nealley. It is always amusing to hear the Democratic party, which, when in power, has invariably demonstrated its incapacity, talk about needed "reforms" when in the minority.

The Commercial's Issue.

Upon the issue as thus presented we are quite ready to give the case to the jury of the people.—Commercial.

The chief issue "thus presented," after a careful perusal of the article of which the above is the closing paragraph, seems to be that in the case of the Republican nominee the office sought the man, while in the case of the Democratic nominee the man sought the office. If this is the issue we are also "quite ready" to give the case to the jury of the people. Let them decide between the candidate on the one hand who accepted a nomination that was almost unanimously tendered him by his fellow citizens without his lifting a finger to secure it, a nomination that carried with it an unqualified expression of confidence in his particular fitness for a place that he had no desire to become a candidate for until he received their most complimentary and unsought indorsement; and a candidate on the other who in unison with his friends has been conducting a vigorous canvass to secure the nomination. If this is the issue we accept it most cheerfully.

In his haste to exhibit the profundity of his own literary research, the editor of the Commercial last evening attacked an illustration contained in the [illegible] speech of Dr. Robinson, made at the Republican caucus on Thursday evening, in which instead of making a point against the scholarly doctor, he simply displayed his own ignorance. [illegible] the writer been acquainted with Scott's works, he would at once have seen that the reference made was not to the Crusaders who went to the Holy Land, but to the Knight De Bracy, who, in his relation to the returned Crusader, Bois de Guilbert, as told in Ivanhoe, of the attack upon himself by Robin Hood [illegible]

"He told every rivet of my armor with a cloth yard shaft, that rapped against my ribs with as little compunction as if my bones had been of iron—But that I wore a shirt of Spanish mail under my plate coat I had been fairly sped."

When the Knight of the Commercial next essays to "set his lance in rest," let him first see that he has for an opponent a Knight not better [illegible] and not make the mistake of confounding fiction with history.

NEARING THE END—BUSINESS BEING PUSHED THROUGH—THE [illegible] BILL—[illegible] OF A MASSACRE—THE STATE REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN—[illegible] SCHOOL SYSTEM—THE ROCKLAND WATER BILL—[illegible]

AUGUSTA, March [illegible], 1885.

This will probably be the last week of the session of the sixty-second Legislature of Maine, as the end approaches the members [illegible] to use their labors [illegible] Legislature [illegible]

Wednesday the bill [illegible] came up in the House and [illegible] a [illegible] of the [illegible] question [illegible]

The bill providing that the salary of the Warden of the State Prison should be reg[illegible] [illegible] was defeated in the Senate. A committee [illegible]

[illegible]

The bill which was passed by the House [illegible] Women was defeated in the Senate, [illegible]

The House bill which came from the Temperance Committee, relating to physicians prescribing liquors and requiring them first to take an oath to subscribe only in cases of actual necessity, and requiring the druggist to file such prescription with the name and place of residence of the person presenting the same, was defeated by a large vote. Many could see in it a practical license for each druggist to sell liquors and not any beneficial prohibition of the traffic.

Senator Libby has taken a deep interest in educational matters, and in order to improve our school system, introduced a bill abolishing school districts, this bill was defeated in the House, he then introduced a bill abolishing the office of Supervisor of Schools, and providing for a committee of six in towns of 2,000 inhabitants and over, one of which committee should do the active work and be under the direction of the other five—but only the one delegated to do the work to receive any pay—this passed the Senate but was defeated in the House. A committee of conference was then appointed, but failed to agree. There is no doubt but that our school system needs changes some of which should be radical and sweeping. In our country towns under the present system, no adequate returns are received for the money expended.

The bill to exempt Masonic and other Fraternal Relief associations from the Statute relating to life insurance, has passed both branches and become a law. This will be a relief to the associations within the provisions of the bill.

The bill abolishing arrest and imprisonment for debt came up in the Senate, Wednesday, the bill being favored by a minority of the committee. Senator Labroke favored the bill and spoke at some length. After some debate the bill was defeated by a large majority.

The law compelling school districts to have the doors of their school houses swing out, has been amended, so as not to apply to school houses one story in height.

The bill providing for the appointment of a commission to examine into the claims of drafted soldiers for a reimbursement of money paid, was indefinitely postponed in the House, in which action the Senate concurred.

The bill which was introduced to legalize the doings of constables in calling the town meetings in the town of Plymouth, being opposed by prominent men from that town, was indefinitely postponed in the House to-day.

The [illegible] bill, which called forth such an able speech from Mr. McGillicuddy in the House and passed that branch by a large majority, was defeated in the Senate to-day. That branch after amending [illegible] indefinitely postponed it.

Quite a sharp debate occurred in the House last evening over the bill giving a supply of water to the town of Waterville. The committee reported that the matter be referred to the next Legislature. This report was accepted by the Senate and a bill substituted and passed. When the bill came to the House that body refused to concur with the Senate and indefinitely postponed the bill.

To-day, in the House, there was a sharp debate between Messrs. Moore of Thomaston and Little [illegible] of Rockland over the Rockland Water Company bill. There has been a new company organized called the Atlantic Water Company. This is a rival company to the old one and has met with very opposition from it. [illegible]

Wednesday while the temperance bill was in the heat of discussion Speaker [illegible] read the despatch stating that Congress had placed General Grant upon the retired list of the army. The news was received amid immense applause, [illegible] this long delayed act of justice [illegible].

Everything about the State House and the hotels indicates the closing of the session. Members [illegible] hurried [illegible] to [illegible] as soon as the final adjournment [illegible] packed and the books, papers [illegible] furnished by the State are boxed or packed ready to go with the members to civil life [illegible] duty. Members who may be preparing for the afternoon trains are shaking hands and bidding good bye to acquaintances formed during the session [illegible] and will continue for long years, and be remembered as one of the pleasures of legislators' life. W.

Decided Effect on General Grant

NEW YORK, March [illegible].

General Grant retired soon after Dr. Douglass painted his throat on Tuesday night with the idea that he was going to sleep at once, but it was after midnight when he fell into a peaceful slumber that lasted until nearly daylight. He woke at his usual time of arising, but, not feeling [illegible] went to sleep again and did not get up until nearly noon. After being [illegible] a refreshing bath, the General ate a little jelly, which he seemed to relish. His mind was bright and his spirits were cheerful, and he entered upon his literary work with a zeal that recalled his old time energy. He had been working [illegible] when there was a loud ring at the door. The rosy-cheeked Irish girl went to the door with her lips [illegible] properly arranged, and ready to refuse to give any information, but she was asked no questions.

The visitor handed the envelope, and requested her to give it at once to the General. She did so. It was a telegraph message, and he opened it slowly, thinking it was only another one of the many expressions of sympathy with which he had been flooded lately. As his eye ran over the brief message his hand trembled slightly and a change of color spread over his usually impassive face. He called his wife, and when she came handed her the announcement that had just come from Washington that the Retirement bill had been passed and signed by the President. The gallant General, who has looked upon so many startling sights unmoved, was visibly affected by this tardy recognition of his services by his countrymen.

After the first shock from the good news were off the General relapsed into his usual stoical condition and remained for a long time in deep meditation. He then folded up his literary material and laid them away for the day. He walked up and down his room, occasionally stopping to look out at the bright sunshine, and seemed to grow brighter immediately. When Dr. Douglass called about 2 p. m. the General was in better condition than he has been for many days and expressed himself as greatly pleased with the action of Congress. The weakness that has troubled him so much since Saturday has disappeared. This step was firm and his voice had the ring of vigor. He went through the operation of having his throat dressed with his usual calmness and then seemed to have taken a new grip on life. His condition continued to improve during the day. To the many callers who came to congratulate him upon his good fortune, however, the answer was given that he could not be seen, and they went away pleased to know that the patient had passed a better day than he had for a long time. He ate rather heartily of minced meat, terrapin and liquid food for his evening meal, and seemed to enjoy his food more than he has for several weeks.

In the afternoon, about 3 the ex-President ordered his carriage and took a drive for about two hours in the Park, and returned greatly refreshed. When Dr. Douglass called at 10 at night the General was unusually cheerful. His throat was painted with cocaine and he went to bed in better shape than he has been in for weeks.

Dr Douglass said, "General Grant has had a red letter day for him. He has eaten heartily, been out riding and seems considerably improved. The condition of his throat is no better, however, and the progress of the disease has not been checked."

A host of telegrams were sent from Washington to General Grant immediately upon the passage of the Retirement bill. The first one was from Congressman Boutelle, of Maine, and told of the enthusiastic applause with which the action of the House was received. There were twenty five or thirty other despatches of a congratulatory nature.

GENERAL GRANT'S ILLNESS

New and Serious Phases of his Malady

New York, March 6. The Telegram says: "There is no longer a doubt that General Grant's malady has assumed an alarming form. Dr. Douglas said the great danger lies in the loss of strength incident to the deficiency of giving him nourishment he can retain on his stomach. Recent prostration, following the reception of news which was exciting, [illegible] indicates how far backwards in strength he has fallen. The disease itself too has come to the surface at other points, and is eating that it has been progressing rapidly in the past few days. The disease is [illegible] in such a place that a knife cannot be resorted to and there is no hope of prolonging the life of the distinguished patient beyond a few weeks."

A Scheme that Discounts Col Sellers

An Albany special to the Commercial Advertiser says an extraordinary scheme has come to light here. It proposes the creation of a National Department of Public Works, after the pattern of that in New York City. The scheme is based on certain memorials of the American Society of Civil Engineers, which has been taken up by Democratic politicians who are trying to get around the civil service law and Mr. Cleveland's probable indorsement of it. A memorial has been circulated among civil engineers asking them to use their influence with Congress for the passage of the measure.

Democrats who know the scope and importance of the subject declare that if Republican Senators can be induced to act with the Democrats the latter can bid defiance to the civil service act. The scope of the scheme includes the coast and geodetic surveys, Powell's survey, improvements of rivers and harbors, all light houses and light ships, signal service and secret service, with a total expenditure of $20,000,000 annually. Besides this there is the building of post offices, the rehabilitation of the navy and the construction of a canal between New York and Washington.

The President's Callers

Washington, Mch. 6. The crowd of callers at the White House to-day was even greater than that of yesterday. They began to arrive before the doors were open and continued coming in large numbers all day.

The Union Pacific Railroad

Senator Hoar read in the Senate, to-day, a letter from President Adams, of the Union Pacific Railroad, in relation to the bill recently introduced by Mr Hoar, providing for the settlement of financial matters between the Road and the Government. Mr. Adams, though considering fair and reasonable the proposition of equalized payments amounting to $1,300,000 yearly, still considers that such a system would seriously hamper the road and its business, give additional facilities to competing lines, and check the development of the country through which the road passes. But the road, of course, will accept such terms as are imposed upon it and will live up to it. If on a fair trial the burden exceeds the company's strength it is not doubted that Congress will modify it.

Confirmation of the Cabinet.

The President to-day accepted the resignations of President Arthur's Cabinet and signed the commissions of the new Cabinet officers. They will probably enter on the discharge of their duties to-morrow. All Cabinet nominations were confirmed to-day without debate or division and by an unanimous vote of the Senate. No other business was done.

Republican Congressmen Call on the President.

The Star this evening says "Representatives Bayne, Hiscock and Millard called on President Cleveland to-day and had quite a long talk with him. They told the President they approved of the attitude he had taken in his inaugural and in carrying out the policy therein declared he would have their hearty support. In this they spoke as Republicans and said they believed they spoke for a large majority of their party. The President received their [illegible] in the best possible spirit and thanked them with much feeling and earnestness for their promises." The Star says that it seems to be generally understood that Charles S. Fairchild of New York City, formerly Attorney General of the State will shortly be appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to succeed French. Mr. Bassle of Albany, is mentioned as Mr. Coon's successor.

A LETTER OF THANKS

Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham: Very dear Madam: My wife Arie A. Green has suffered unknown pains till I had almost given up all hopes of finding any relief for her. But the Guiding Spirit referred me to your Vegetable Compound. I went 12 miles to purchase a bottle and the first two doses gave her immediate relief, and after the use of the first bottle she declared herself a new person, two bottles entirely cured her. Your medicine is invaluable to me. It was indeed a messenger of peace in my house, it cured my wife, and God knows I am the happiest man alive to-day. Words cannot express our feelings towards you.

AMUSEMENTS

Miss Margaret Mather as Juliana.

One of the largest and most brilliant audiences that ever assembled in the Bangor Opera House gathered there last evening to greet the favorite actress Miss Margaret Mather, as Juliana in Tobin's delightful comedy, "The Honeymoon." Every seat in the house was sold for the entertainment and at 7 [illegible] the entrance to the building was filled with a crowd of people which extended out into the street trying to gain admittance. Special trains brought large numbers of people from Oldtown, Orono and Ellsworth. The assembly was seated so that the entertainment began promptly at eight o'clock.

Large theatre goers, who have seen Miss Mather in the tragedies and comedies are surprised and delighted to find that in one she is equally as good as in the other. The transition from the tragedy in which she is so famed to the comedy in which she appears so laughingly and brilliantly [illegible], and which very few of our leading actresses would care to attempt. But Miss Mather appears to great advantage in either, and her acting in each is such as to please and entertain the most critical observers. Many persons last evening expressed the opinion that Miss Mather in the comedy role was even more brilliant than as a tragedienne, but these were individuals who favor comedy. It is enough to say that there seems to be no chance to make a distinction. Her Juliana is a decided success and in the essaying of that role she is undoubtedly unsurpassed.

There are some parts in her presentation which are most charming. Especially strong is her acting in the passages which show the contrast between the impetuous and self willed maiden and the loving and affectionate wife and in the growth of her devotion to the Duke Aranza and where after listening to his praise she parts with him so very affectionately. The scene of the dance on the green displayed to the greatest advantage Miss Mather's beauty and gracefulness and the audience testified to their appreciation of the scene by the most generous applause. Her presentation of the roll of Juliana will always be held in pleasant remembrance by those who witnessed it last evening.

We are pleased to be able to say that the supporting company was the best that has appeared in Bangor thus far this season. Mr. Milnes Levick, well known as an actor of the first rank, sustained the role of the Duke Aranza uncommonly well, and everyone seemed delighted with his acting. Mr. Frederick Paulding, another fine actor, sustained the part of Count Rolando in a fine manner. Mr. William Davidge, an old favorite in Bangor, greatly pleased the audience by his double impersonation of the "would be Duke." The rest of the support was of the highest quality, and especially good were the remaining lady members of the company.

The "Honeymoon" is not a play which can be given much applause. There are no great climaxes or surprising situations but last evening every piece of fine acting was received with great approbation. When Miss Mather made her first appearance on the stage she was warmly greeted by applause and bowed her thanks in a most pleasant and graceful manner. At the end of the third act Miss Mather and Mr. Levick were called before the curtain, and at the end of the last act the audience rose from their seats and most enthusiastically gave them a recall. Miss Mather's reception on her opening night seemed to be all that could be desired.

The costumes were of the most elegant description and added much to the brilliancy of the presentation.

This afternoon she appears in one of her favorite roles, that of "Pauline" in the "Lady of Lyons," and she will be greeted by a large audience. Many persons were glad to learn that the company would present the play here, as it has met with marked favor in other cities. A few good seats may yet be obtained at the box office. This evening Miss Mather plays "Lady Macbeth."

The Coming Opera Season

From present appearances the Bennett and Moulton Comic Opera Company will play to enormous business at the Opera House next week, as, notwithstanding the immense sale and attendant excitement on the Mather entertainments, over seven hundred opera tickets were sold at the box office yesterday. Those who propose to attend during the week should secure their seats without delay. The company has "caught on" immensely at Lewiston, and is playing nightly to the capacity of the large Music Hall.

MANAGER J. M. HILL'S HORSES

Westmont and Lorene in Bangor

Manager J. M. Hill's celebrated pacers, Westmont and Lorene about which so much has been said, and which so many people in Bangor have expressed a desire to see, were given a spin on the Hampden road yesterday forenoon. There was a very admiring crowd of lookers-on, many of our citizens having taken out their own teams from which to view the movements of the pacers. The horses were attached to a handsome black cutter and were driven a part of the time by Mr. Hill and the rest of the time by their driver, Mr. P. V. Johnson.

Westmont, the horse attracting the most attention, is a chestnut sorrel, and fifteen hands and one-half an inch in height. He has a record of 2 01¾, the fastest mile ever made in harness. Mr. Hill paid the sum of $20 000 for him. Westmont seems nervous when in the harness unless he is allowed to go at full speed. Lorene is a six year old mare, black in color and fifteen hands, one and one-half inches in height and has a record of 2 16¾. She is very gentle in the harness being different from Westmont in that respect. Both horses weigh exactly 825 pounds and when in harness move almost without a slip or a break.

The snow was [illegible] on the Hampden road yesterday and they were not driven at full speed but the gentlemen there who were watching their splendid gait did not at all doubt the stories told of their wonderful speed. No boots or rolls are used about the horses except when they are on the track. They are undoubtedly the fastest pair in the world as their performances thus far indicate. They have won many [illegible] against matched horses which have a very low record. Bangor lovers of horses are remarkably fortunate in being so favored as to be allowed to see Mr. Hill's horses in the harness. This gentleman [illegible] a new attraction beside his theatrical company each year and Bangor people are always anxious to know what next will be brought here. Mr. Hill gave a few Bangor gentlemen a ride after the horses and they expressed themselves as being greatly pleased with the team. As a number of ladies have expressed a desire to see the horses an invitation has been [illegible] for all who wish to look at them to call at J. Nichols' stable from eleven to one o'clock to-day.

Public Bible Class

The Bangor Public Bible Class enters to-night upon the second quarter of its history and its promoters have reason to be gratified with its condition and prospects. The class was projected in the Fall, and preliminary steps were taken for its formation in November by one of our prominent business men [illegible] in one of our city Sunday schools. Through his efforts a call was issued for a preliminary meeting by the pastors and Sunday school superintendents of the city churches, and the First church in Brewer. The meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. hall Monday evening, December 1. About one hundred representatives from the different churches were present, with most of the pastors. Pledges of support were promptly made by all present and an executive committee was elected consisting of one member from each church and Sunday School. All matters of detail were left to this committee. The meeting voted to hold the first session of the new class on the following Saturday evening, Dec 6. The committee engaged the First Baptist chapel, as the place for holding the sessions, and extended an invitation to Rev. N. H. Harriman to lead the class. Mr. Harriman accepted the work for three months.

The class met as arranged. It was a bad evening, but about seventy-five persons were present and altogether the beginning was good. From that time the meetings have increased steadily in interest and in numbers until, at the end of the quarter, on last Saturday evening, the chapel was full, extra seats being brought in. The exercises consist of the study of the International lessons and are marked by a spirit of enthusiasm and hearty interest on the part of all present. The committee have secured the continued services of the present leader so long as his other work will permit. The meetings begin promptly at half past seven and close at half-past eight and all who care to attend will meet a cordial welcome.

Course of Reading

Probably there are a good many living in Bangor, who love to read, but because they do not know what to read, take anything that happens to come to them. The Chautauquan course of reading is just the thing for that person, to straighten out and put in order what they know, and to reveal many things which they do not know. It is put in such an attractive form, that if the novel reader should once begin the "course of reading" they would be glad to make the exchange, and would find it far more interesting and instructive. It is adapted to all, old or young, ignorant or learned, rich or poor; the one who has much or little spare time, or wants to skim lightly or go deeply into useful knowledge. In fact, it is just what its name denotes, "The People's College." If any who read this article wish to know more about the "Chautauquan course of reading," write to Dr. J. H. Vincent, Plainfield, N. J., for circulars explaining the system, and they will discover that it is just what they have felt in need of for years. It is not a money making scheme. Started about six years ago for the good it might do. It has become so popular, and so attractive to the world at large, that to-day it has a membership of over 60,000 readers, scattered all over the world and increasing rapidly, with a large number graduating each year.

NEWSPAPER ARCHIVE®

Hester.

"Oh! Hal! I am so sorry! I never thought of such a thing!"

"I should think you might have known when a fellow was in earnest. I've gone on with no end of other girls before, but this is the real genuine thing. You must have seen all the summer how I've worshipped the very ground you trod upon. Look here!" Hal dived into the recesses of a coat pocket somewhere near the region of his heart, brought forth a small paper package, and extracted from it a sharp fragment of white rock. Hester Conway looked on with interest.

"Quartz, isn't it?" she asked gravely.

He nodded. "You remember the picnic [illegible] You picked that up [illegible] gave it to me because it was a bore to carry, and I have kept it ever since."

Involuntarily Hester broke into a merry laugh, for she knew that impetuous Hal had been in love fifty times before, and would be fifty times again. But for the moment he was desperately serious, and Hester, repenting, grew suddenly grave again. "Oh! Hal! how I wish it had been something better worth keeping, and more—more comfortably portable. Pray throw it away, and let us forget all this nonsense."

"Impossible." Hal stalked gloomily [illegible] between the high banks of the shady [illegible] where the two were walking [illegible] moodily at his boots. "I'm [illegible] a fellow to fall in love one day and cut [illegible] next, Hester. You must have cheated [illegible] as [illegible] Hester, or you'd listen to me [illegible]

[illegible]

Well, I must make the best of it, but I [illegible] that other fellow has got his [illegible]

[illegible]

"And I hope some day you will find [illegible] ever so much nicer than I am, [illegible] will be able to [illegible]

[illegible]

The rector spoke fiercely, perhaps to hide his feelings, and swallowed down a lump which rose in his throat.

"Oh! by-the-by, Mrs. Guest wants you to go and see them. 'If you did not mind,' she said, so sweetly, so humbly, always thinking of others before herself."

"When, papa?" Hester's voice sounded strange and untuneful.

"She is going to send the carriage for you to-morrow afternoon, and hopes you will contrive to spend a night or two at Guestwycke. You are a good hand at comforting people, Hester. Do what you can for them."

Guestwycke was a fine old Tudor mansion, lying high above the river, which later on, after many windings, rushed through a [illegible] on its way seaward. It was built of red sandstone, and was smothered twice a year in purple wistaria blossom. But the flowers had faded and gone now like everything cheerful about the place; the windows were veiled as Hester drove up, the silence seemed to speak audibly of the calamity which had befallen it. How many hours Hester had spent there in the old times never to come again! How many a warm welcome had she received in the dim old hall which was the glory of the manor house. Now she was drawn silently into an embrace almost convulsive in its fervor, and, blinded with fast-falling tears, was led into the darkened library.

"The good child has come, John. Here she is!" Mrs. Guest took Hester's hand in hers and drew her to the fireside where the master of the house sat in his great leathern chair. He was older than his wife by many years, but the storms of life had failed to ruffle the serenity of the fine old face, those aristocratic clear cut features were stamped with the impress of a noble mind.

Grief confers strange dignity. Hester felt as if she was a stranger [illegible] [illegible] the only tears to fall, for the fount of sorrow soon runs dry in aged eyes. But the sight of the girl's sweet face, and [illegible] grief—for the shadow of the couple never guessed at her own share in it—seemed a comfort to the poor parents in those first days of their loss.

From childhood Hester Conway had been a frequent visitor at Guestwycke and sweet [illegible] memories lurked for her at every corner. Up and down the shady avenue [illegible] had led her old pony when he first taught her to ride—upon the shining beach of the river rippling below—[illegible] with the gloom that was everywhere this dreary November. They had flitted lightly through summer afternoons, on this very shady bank they had lingered [illegible] which he had asked her to be his wife. What [illegible] [illegible] had depended upon her answer!

While the mourning parents at Guestwycke went [illegible], and Hester's sorrow sought relief in tears [illegible] gossip was busy [illegible] the little world of Silvercombe. The rector's William had it from the ostler at the Red Dragon, who had it from the kitchen-maid whose mother cleaned for all the best families, who had it from Mrs. Tracy's own maid Maria, who surely ought to know whether her mistress was engaged or not. And engaged it was [illegible]—or rather had been, since the poor gentleman was dead—to Captain Talbot Guest, of Guestwycke. And right it was, would swear to, for her mistress had told her so with her own lips! And were not mistress and maid both busy as bees stitching away at the mourning, which was being ordered from Exeter for between us!

Mrs. Tracy was a pretty young widow who in social life had lately proved herself a formidable rival to the silvercombe girls [illegible] She had established herself some twelve months since in the best apartments the primitive little place afforded, and settled in no haste to put them [illegible] though it was understood that she was merely on the wing to other climes. What share her interest in Captain Guest might have in detaining her at Silvercombe was best known to herself, but however well founded had been her hopes [illegible] one day of reigning at Guestwycke as his wife, they were now shattered forever. But the fact of the conquest [illegible] increased her importance immensely in Silvercombe society. The charming young widow had of course been credited with a great many conquests, matrimonious words, but that she should have aimed so high and brought down the bird [illegible] Silvercombe could not recover its astonishment.

Public opinion had always hitherto designated Hester Conway for the heir of Guestwycke, but now it underwent a change. People saw how impossible it was that Hester, with all her sweet grace and gentle dignity, should ever have aspired to rival Mrs. Tracy's maturer, more astutely taking charms.

The Hester who returned from Guestwycke at the end of the week, pale and wan with dark rings encircling her beautiful tawny [illegible] eyes, pointed the contrast [illegible] As usual the pertinent [illegible] was the best to hear [illegible] with [illegible] during her two days absence [illegible] sisters' [illegible] she [illegible]

"I don't believe it," she said bluntly, turning suddenly upon Dora with a pale, proud face.

"My dear Hester," she says to herself, "Surely she ought to know. And, indeed, now we come to think of it, they were a great deal together while you were away [illegible] which [illegible] before h[illegible]

"It's uncommonly strange, but she has actually put on mourning for him, so of course [illegible] supplemented [illegible] 'Poor Talbot! You know we used to tease you about him at one time, Hester. [illegible]'

"Good-night. You must tell me all the news to-morrow; I am too tired to talk to-night. Please send me up a cup of tea presently; I won't come down again."

Hester took up her wraps with her usual quiet dignity, and, head erect, marched upstairs. If she were wounded none should know. But she was not wounded. No such false report should destroy her faith in Talbot, her lover, alive or dead! The girls had made a mistake. It could not be true!

Next morning, Sunday, she erased herself in her armor of proof, and went off to church. In her quiet corner, hidden from the congregation by the old carved pulpit, she was not pained by glances of either wonder or pity, nor by the sight of Lorette Tracy in her fashionable mourning, wiping away an occasional tear with a black-bordered handkerchief. But an ordeal awaited her when the service was over. As she emerged by the chancel door, intending to escape the usual greeting in the churchyard, and steal quietly home by the private path to the Rectory, she was waylaid by a graceful figure in trailing black robes, who stood barring her way with outstretched hands.

"Dear Hester! the very person I most wanted to see! You were at Guestwycke yesterday. Do tell me how are the dear old people? You know, of course,"—with a keen glance at Hester's pale face—"you know the tie which binds us together? You have heard that poor Captain Guest and I . . . . ." She paused, a pause suggesting uncontrollable emotion, and pressing a handkerchief lightly over her eyes.

"I know you say you were engaged to him, if that is what you mean, Mrs. Tracy," Hester answered bluntly, trying to disengage the hand which the widow retained in her own.

"We kept our secret well, I think," Mrs. Tracy faltered gently, "but now I have thought it right to let his parents know all that passed between us, and how dear he was to me."

Hester, wrapped in her panoply of proud reserve, bowed with grave indifference, and made as though she would pass on.

"I have begged for an interview directly they are able to bear it. Meantime it has been such a relief to know you were with them—you who knew my poor Talbot so well . . . . . !"

Hester wrenched away her hand quite fiercely. "Excuse me, Mrs. Tracy—my father is waiting." The torture was more than she could bear. There were limits to endurance, and though she mistrusted Lorette Tracy, and her heart clung obstinately to its belief in Talbot's fidelity, her reason was beginning to yield. What if the report were true? Who could blame him if, hurt at her coldness, he had consoled himself elsewhere, and carried his suit where it would find more ready hearing? If only it had been any one else! Hester moaned in her despair.

The girl had left the manor house with a promise to repeat her visit to Talbot's parents as soon as possible. It had been arranged between them that the rector should drive her over one morning early in the following week, and leave her to spend a long day with her old friends.

Hester for her part burned with a feverish impatience to find herself once more at Guestwycke. Perhaps amid the old scenes her faith in Talbot would revive, and this horrible conviction which was forcing itself upon her would loose its hold. Alas! poor Hester!

Upon her arrival at Guestwycke, on Tuesday morning, she found the quiet household stirred into gentle commotion. A fire burned in the large seldom used drawing room; freshly-cut hot-house flowers were disposed about the tables. Mrs. Guest came to meet her in a strange flutter of excitement, though with the usual affectionate welcome.

"My dear! You have heard the news? How little I guessed it when we last talked together! Mrs. Tracy comes to us this afternoon—we could not do less than ask her here—she who would have been our poor boy's wife! The old lady's lips quivered [illegible] made her young visitor sit [illegible] old-fashion couch and began unfastening her wraps with trembling fingers.

"Dear Hester! you will not mind delaying [illegible] sociable this evening? The [illegible] must go for Mrs. Tracy; we must show her every honor for Talbot's sake, or better still"—with a sudden happy inspiration—"won't you stay a few days and help us entertain her?"

Mrs. Guest [illegible] with mild surprise [illegible]

"My dear! I would not press you against your will. You have many duties at [illegible] I know."

Hester recovered herself with an effort. "Dear Mrs. Guest! I am always so happy here! Some day when you are alone again. One visitor at a time will be enough for you."

"Ah! well! it seems all so strange! If Talbot had but trusted us with his secret! Did you never suspect it, Hester? You and my poor boy were always friends in the old times [illegible]—passing her hand caressingly over the girl's auburn hair—"But it was not to be!"

Hester writhed under the kind touch which had almost broke down her composure. She could not speak a word.

"You know this lady, I think, my dear," Mrs. Guest went on. "Tell me what is she like? Pretty? Gentle? Well mannered?"

"Oh! don't ask me!" poor Hester broke out in uncontrollable agony. Her overcharged heart seemed bursting with pain. Then in a stifled voice: "I know—so little about her."

"I am not fond of strangers," sighed Mrs. Guest.

"I wish you could have stayed, Hester! —But of course she is very nice, and we must try to like her, dear Talbot's choice!" the [illegible] consoled herself softly.

As Hester in the humble rectory [illegible] reached the end of the drive that afternoon, the returning barouche dashed in at the great gates of Guestwycke. The groom who was driving her pulled up to make way for it, and its occupant, Mrs. Tracy, leaned forward with a bow and a smile. A smile of triumph Hester thought bitterly. And this was the rival who had supplanted her, who was to take her place at Guestwycke as the child of the house!

It had been some comfort to her sore heart to think she could be of use to Talbot's dear ones. To cherish and care for them—to fill the place he had left empty—what else was left to her! Poor Hester covered her face, and in her loneliness and humiliation broke into a flood of tears. The blow had fallen so heavily, sweeping away all [illegible] not only the powerful present, the hopeful future—it was the past also, the past with all its memories, which [illegible] vanished in an hour.

III.

A telegram was thrust into Hester's hand as she presently crossed the Rectory threshold, a summons from her eldest sister, Mrs. Ormsby. Hester always thought afterward it must have been by her good angel's special provision that measles made its appearance in the Ormsby household just at this particular time. She obeyed the rather incoherent telegram, and flew to Taunton to her sister's help. Mrs. Ormsby had five little ones who all succumbed in turn, and kept Hester's hands full! as she glided from one bedside to another, smoothing the pillows under feverish little heads, or carrying cooling drinks to parched lips or answering appeals from fractious convalescents.

Janet was a motherly sort of body, with no conception of any world beyond her nursery, nor an idea that it was possible for Hester to have any interests beyond a brew of blackcurrant tea, or the spreading of [illegible] poultice. At times Hester scarcely thought so either. The clamoring little voices and the steam from bronchitis kettles shut out bitter thoughts and painful memories. They faded into the dim distance in face of the absorbing necessity for [illegible] that Jack did not take cold, and that Mysie did take nourishment. Those two cost their mother and aunt many a wakeful night of nursing, long after the robuster ones were safely convalescent.

Perhaps it was no wonder that as the strain relaxed and the care-taking grew less arduous, Aunt Hester should droop and lose her bright color. Although Janet was so comfortably unobservant, she could not help noticing it. Of course it was the want of sleep and the warm rooms. Hester was always such a one for air. She must come with them to the seaside and recover tone. So a week later found them all wandering over the sands at Morthoe, an out-of-the-way corner of the world after Hester's own heart.

Long before this, people had quite left off talking about the disaster in the Soudan. The news was some weeks old now, and so many things had happened since. Only at Morthoe a still, silent woman moved through life with all the hope crushed out of her.

Could she only have known for certain that she had a right to weep! If but for one moment Talbot could have come back from the regions of peace to tell her the truth—was he hers still or that other's—Hester felt she could have borne it better. A wild longing, which was almost a prayer, would come over her sometimes, as she wandered on the rugged shore washed by the wild Atlantic; and she would scarcely have been surprised to see the familiar form of him who had been her lover—yes, once! thank Heaven for that! step forth from out the shadow of those weird rocks, with the farewell smile still on his lips and the love-light in his eyes.

While they were still at Morthoe, one morning—a morning which Hester Conway will never forget—a letter and newspaper were carried up on the tray with the early cup of tea which she took, invalid fashion, upstairs. Dora's letters were not wont to be exciting, and Hester, opening it, read with rather languid interest, till she came to this strange paragraph:

"I send you a paper with an account of the rejoicings at Guestwycke on Talbot's return. All went on well (we were there, of course), and the poor old people's quiet happiness was a sight to see. Isn't it a strange, romantic kind of story! The hero of the day asked particularly after you, and seemed rather annoyed at your absence. I did not dare mention poor Lorette to him. Didn't you laugh over her imposture? If Talbot had not turned up again the truth would actually never have been known at all! Mrs. Tracy was staying with friends at Exeter when the news of Talbot's safety reached Guestwycke. Mr. Guest sent her a telegram at once, and the very next day Lorette wrote to her landlady here, throwing up her rooms and ordering all her belongings to be sent to her at Exeter directly. It seems she does not intend to show her face in this neighborhood again. Of course, you won't be surprised to hear that Talbot's good father and mother have quite forgiven her, and paid the month's bills she left owing!"

Hester put her hand to her head in dazed bewilderment. Was she dreaming? Had Dora lost her senses?—Or was it possible—barely possible—

She took her letter, and without even waiting to coil up the auburn hair, which rippled over her shoulders, rushed to her sister's room.

"Janet! I have heard from Dora. What does she mean? Was the report about Captain Guest untrue? Did he escape?"

"My dear, there was no need to escape. Luckily for him he was safe at Khartoum on sick leave all the time. Didn't I tell you? His mother sent you a message. Perhaps I forgot to deliver it. Ah! I remember now, it was the day Mysie was so ill!"

"I heard nothing of it until this moment." Then—very low—with down bent head, "And Lorette Tracy, Janet, was that tale false too?"

Mrs. Ormsby laughed heartily. "Oh! Dora has been telling you the denouement of that story, has she? It seems her engagement was all a fabrication. Ingenious, wasn't it? She would never have been found out, either, if her supposed fiance had not come to life again so opportunely! Mac did laugh when I told him about it. He always rather admired Mrs. Tracy. Now, Hester, help me to think. Had I better order tapioca or sago for the chicks to-day? Mysie likes sago best, but Jack . . . ."

Domestic details such as these, however, had no power to invade the dream land where Hester was wandering this morning. She evaded the children, and as soon as she could, hurried away by herself to carry her joy where she had carried her sorrow, to the lonely shore.

The purple sea was sparkling and dancing under the blues of Devon skies, the white foam was throwing a lace mantle over the lower levels of the jagged rocks, and leaping over higher and higher toward the white quartz pinnacles which crowned them. Nature with strange sympathy had shed its sunshine and brilliance over all the beautiful bay. Hester, well-wrapped, sat long and contentedly under the shelter of a great brown iron-stone giant looking out on the sparkling waters, till a shadow fell upon the book lying so useless open on her lap.

It was Colonel Ormsby's daily habit to come and escort her home, and being still but feeble, for his spirits were a-weary, she had been glad of her kind brother-in-law's strong arm to help her up the cliff. But to-day a new courage [illegible] her limbs. She looked up with a smile one of her old smiles.

"I can do without an arm to-day, Mac," she was beginning, but the words died on her lip.

The new comer was even taller and broader than Mac. His moustache also bristled fiercely, and he was bronzed by desert suns to the tint of an Arab chief.

"Mac has sent a deputy to-day, Hester," he said smilingly. She stood dumb in trembling surprise, utterly unable even to gasp out a welcome. But perhaps the light in her eyes spoke for her, for Talbot threw himself down beside her and kissed her hands.

"Oh, Hester! You at least might have known me better!" Then in a still, soft [illegible] not such [illegible] Hester [illegible]—"Hester! I have not changed!"

"But I have," she whispered softly.

And in another moment her head lay on his shoulder (they were so safely out of sight), and this bold wooer, whom Lorette had claimed for her own, was holding her against his heart in a clasp which defied the world to take her from him.

Colonel Ormsby and his wife, walking down to the shore later, met the pair climbing the cliff together, a pretty impersonation of Love's Young Dream. Hester, who found that she did not require anyone at all, leant on Talbot's arm, while he, tall, bronzed and soldier-like, was looking down tenderly into her fair face half hidden by a wind-blown tangle of auburn curls. She had been telling shyly, with hushed breath, of the Via Dolorosa her feet had so lately trodden and listening with pitiful tears in her sweet eyes to his tale of the dangers he had passed and of the short, sharp, merciful illness which had been a blessing in disguise. Mrs. Ormsby looked at her husband significantly.

Hester's brother-in-law gave an expressive whistle, and began to hum under his breath "Oh! there's nothing half so sweet in life . . . ." Both guessed what had happened and were ready with their good wishes.

But the warmest congratulations came from Guestwycke, where John Guest and his good wife soon had the joy of welcoming a daughter-in-law after their own heart. We may be sure that the flowers bloomed brightly, and the place wore its gayest aspect for this visitor who came to take up her abode there for good and all.

"It is what we always wished, Hester," said Mrs. Guest, her bright old eyes shining with happiness. "I never could take to that Mrs. Tracy, except before she turned out an impostor."

"Hush! my dear," reproved her husband gently. "Hester knows how much we love her," taking his new daughter's hand in his, and patting it affectionately, "and I think that there need be no ill feeling!"

"TIS PASSING STRANGE"

but some people are so constituted that they can struggle through life without JEWELRY, others think life not worth living without it.
